EICHMANN: "AS THY SWORD HATH MADE WOMEN CHILDLESS, SO SHALL THY MOTHER BE CHILDLESS AMONG WOMEN"

Adolf Eichmann was hanged just before midnight on May 31, for the part he played in rounding up millions of Jews and transporting them to their deaths in Nazi camps during World War II.

The execution, in Ramle prison, came shortly after President Itzhak Ben-Zvi had rejected Eichmann's last plea for mercy, says the New York Times. A brief announcement from his office stated that "the President of the State of Israel has decided not to exercise his prerogative to pardon offenders or reduce sentences in the case of Adolf Eichmann."

Eichmann had lost his appeal to the Supreme Court of Israel against the death sentence imposed on him for complicity in the wartime deaths of millions of Jews.

The machinery was ready for his execution, more than two years after Israeli agents captured him in his hiding place in Argentina. The Israeli Government was known to have decided to act swiftly to forestall any chance of a campaign building up to spare him from gallows.

The death penalty for ordinary murder was abolished in Israel in 1954, but the capital sentence was retained in the law for the punishment of Nazis and Nazi collaborators. Eichmann was tried under this law, says the New York Times.

The ex-Gestapo colonel played a major role in the Nazi extermination program which sent Jewish men, women and children to death, says the New York Herald Tribune. His victims had been herded in gas chambers, lined up and shot on the edge of mass graves, or strung up on the gallows. Eichmann was the first prisoner sentenced to death in Israel's 14-year history. There is no capital punishment in Israel except for crimes committed against the Jewish people. A government statement issued after the hanging said:

"Adolf Eichmann was executed by hanging today in accordance with the sentence of death passed by the Jerusalem District Court on Dec. 15, 1961.

"The appeal having been dismissed by the Supreme Court on May 29, 1962, and the Minister of Justice having certified that the President has decided not to exercise his prerogative of clemency.

"The body was examined by a government physician who pronounced life to be extinct at 2338 hours (11:58 p.m.).

"The execution was witnessed by the superintendent of prisons, a government physician, an officer of the Tel Aviv District Administration, two police officers who were present in court when the death sentence was pronounced to identify Eichmann as the person who was condemned to death, and a clergyman of the Protestant faith.

"Two representatives of the local press and two representatives of the foreign press were also present."

The two foreign correspondents represented the British Reuters news agency and the West German press, says the New York Herald Tribune. Eichmann's body was cremated and the ashes scattered at sea. Under the old British mandate rule of Palestine, the body of an executed prisoner was turned over to his family, but Israel has ruled against following this procedure, apparently in fear that Eichmann's grave may become a shrine for neo-Nazis.

The official announcement of President Ben-Zvi's rejection of Eichmann's appeal for mercy was issued at 10:32 p.m. (4:42 p.m. New York time). Soon after the President made his decision, he informed the Justice Ministry and word was sent to prison authorities, who immediately began preparations for the hanging.

Eichmann's spiritual adviser, the Rev. William L. Hull, visited the death cell for one-and-a-half hours and reported that Eichmann was "very hard and very bitter at the verdict" of the Israeli Supreme Court which confirmed his conviction and sentence of death imposed by a District Court last December.

Eichmann's execution came two years and nine days after he was kidnapped in Argentina by Israeli agents and brought to Israel.

President Ben-Zvi began studying the material in the Eichmann case immediately after completion of a formality — receipt of a Justice Ministry memorandum on the case, together with the Justice Minister's own recommendation.

In his last attempt to escape the gallows, Eichmann pleaded that he was merely "an instrument" of the Nazi leadership and therefore was innocent, says the New York Herald Tribune. His handwritten plea to the President, submitted together with a more formal application for clemency from his defense council, Dr. Robert Servatius of Cologne, showed that the condemned man had not changed his views even in the shadow of death.

Echoing the refrain of the trial defense, Eichmann wrote the President that he had always acted "in Auftrag" (under instructions). He repeated the argument that, had he been the "zealous" expediter of anti-Jewish actions, he would have been promoted and received other rewards, whereas actually "no benefits whatever came to me."

"I declare, as I already declared in court, that I abhor the atrocities against the Jews, which must be viewed as the greatest of crimes," Eichmann said.

"I consider it only just that the perpetrators of such horrors be made to account for their deeds now and in the future. However, a distinction must be made between the responsible Fuehrers (leaders) and those who, like me, had to be mere instruments of the leadership.

"I was not a responsible Fuehrer and, therefore, feel that I am innocent. I cannot accept the court's decision as just."

That Eichmann had remained essentially unchanged was indicated also by Mr. Hull, a missionary who visited the condemned man thirteen times since mid-April. Returning from Ramle, he said, "The situation is very discouraging." He meant Eichmann's spiritual condition.

Several weeks ago, Mr. Hull felt that he was making progress in his struggle to win Eichmann's repentance and redemption. On the day of the execution he felt that this was no longer so, says the New York Herald Tribune. A government spokesman said there had been no change on Eichmann's last day in his behavior or meticulous daily timetable, and that he slept and ate well. This seemed to clash with Mr. Hull's report of a deeply angry and hurt man. Eichmann, according to Mr. Hull, felt that the Supreme Court's ruling was unfair and insisted fervently that he was not guilty.

Whether the machinery worked swiftly on whether to spare Eichmann from a long, torturous wait or to avoid pressures from abroad, could not be determined. The Justice Ministry's report was finished less than a day after the President formally requested it, and was immediately rushed to Mr. Ben-Zvi's office.

The President cancelled all other business for the day and devoted himself entirely to reading a mass of material. Before him were the letters from Eichmann and his lawyer, the Supreme Court judgment, and some of the evidence submitted at the trial. The President also was said to have studied some of the many letters from private individuals in Israel and abroad concerning the question of clemency.

Eichmann, condemned as a major accomplice in the Nazi slayings of millions of Jews, had also sought United Nations and West German help to save him from the gallows. Sources said he pleaded with his counsel, Dr. Robert Servatius, to petition both the United Nations and Bonn to intervene in his behalf.

Justice Minister Dov Joseph had met with Dr. Ben-Zvi in Jerusalem to present his advisory opinion on Eichmann's clemency appeal, says the New York Times. Justice Joseph's advice was not disclosed — but on the basis of the stern judicial judgment against Eichmann he presumably was unable to recommend clemency.

Adolf Eichmann had seemed to shrivel in his glass prisoner's box as he heard the judgment of the Israeli Supreme Court upholding the death sentence for his part in the Nazi extermination of millions of Jews during World War II, says the New York Herald Tribune. The once high-and-mighty head of the Gestapo's Jewish Affairs Department sat motionless but could not control his face, biting his bloodless lips and sucking at his cheeks, as the import of the court's ruling sank in.

It was as if he had come to the last turn in the road and could now see the end a few short weeks away — with only the remote chance of a clemency ruling by Israeli President Itzhak Ben-Zvi standing between him and the gallows.

The words confirming the death sentence imposed by a District Court last December were read by Justice Moshe Silberg. He and the other four members of the Supreme Court took turns reading the 30,000-word judgment, which struck down Eichmann's appeal with unusually forceful words.

The court rejected Eichmann's defense that he was merely a small cog who followed orders, and condemned him as a man of "insatiable bloodthirstiness." The judgment was climaxed with this series of scathing conclusions:

"The appellant did not at all receive orders 'from above,' it was he who was the high and mighty one, he who was the commander in all that pertains to Jewish affairs. He ordered and commanded, not only without orders from his superiors in the hierarchy of the service, but also, at times, in absolute conflict with those orders. . .

"It is clear that the idea of the Final Solution (extermination of Europe's Jews) was not his; but the Fuehrer's. Yet that idea might not have assumed so satanic and infernal an expression — in the blood of millions of tortured and martyred Jews — but for the thorough planning, the zeal, the fanatical enthusiasm and the insatiable bloodthirstiness of the appellant and those who did his bidding. . .

"The appellant has never shown either repentance or weakness or any sapping of strength or any weakening of will in the performance of the task which he undertook. He . . . carried out his unspeakably horrible crimes with genuine joy and enthusiasm, to his own gratification and the satisfaction of all his superiors."

The court denied the existence of any "extenuating circumstances" which, in the law under which Eichmann was tried, could make possible a lower sentence.

Confirming the death sentence, the court said:

"We know only too well how utterly inadequate this death sentence is, as compared to the millions of deaths in most diverse ways he inflicted on his victims. Even as there is no word in human speech to designate deeds such as the deeds of the appellant, so there is no punishment in human law that would fit in its gravity the guilt of the appellant.

"But our knowledge that any treatment meted out to the appellant would be inadequate — as would be any penalty or punishment inflicted on him — can not move us to mitigate the punishment. . . We must impose on Eichmann the maximum penalty."

The final judicial act in the Eichmann drama was over in three-and-a-half hours. The speed of the court action and the finality and toughness of its last words set the roomful of spectators buzzing with excitement as the judges filed out, says the New York Herald Tribune.

But Eichmann seemed to have pulled himself together. He merely turned and left, a trifle paler than when he had entered but seemingly unmoved.

The defense counsel, Dr. Robert Servatius, of Cologne, answered newsmen's questions with a blunt "No comment." But he was already on record with the statement that he would appeal to President Ben-Zvi for clemency.

Justice Shimon Agranat had read this part of the opinion, his Hebrew bearing the heavy American accent that betrayed the origins of the Kentucky-born jurist:

"The District Court has in its judgment dealt with both categories of contentions in an exhaustive, profound and most convincing manner," he said. "We should say at once that we fully concur without hesitation or reserve in all its conclusions and reasons because they are fully supported by copious judical precedents that were cited in the judgment and by the substantial proof culled and abstracted out of the monumental mass of evidence produced to the court.

"Moreover, we are in duty bound to state that were it not for the grave outcome of the decision of the court constituting the subject of the appeal, we would have seen no need whatever to formulate our opinion separately and in our own language, as we contemplate doing, for the conclusions of the District Court rest on solid foundations."

This statement came early in the reading of the opinion and was the first indication to Eichmann that his conviction stood, says the New York Times. He turned his face from the bench for the first time, sighed deeply, and then turned again to Justice Agranat, who continued to read the rejection of the defense counsel's arguments.

"It is pointless to argue that Eichmann was convicted of crimes that were not defined as crimes at the time the acts were committed," he read. There is no positive rule in international law against retroactive punishment, he added.

The principle "Nullum crimen sine lege, nulla poena sine lege" (there is no crime without law, there is no punishment without law), has not yet become a rule of customary international law and hence is not part of Israeli law, the Justice read.

The following outline of the career of Eichmann was prepared by the New York Herald Tribune:

Adolf Eichmann — the name will forever be identified with the Nazi scourge of Jews in Europe in World War II. This was his life:

As the beginning, 1931: Adolf Eichmann, twenty-five-years-old, German-born son of a domineering mother and a weak father, joined the illegal Nazi party in Linz, Austria — the first small step in a monstrous career that in little more than a decade was to make him six million times a murderer of Jews. He had somewhat effeminate features and an inferiority complex which he covered with cocksureness. Behind him was education in a high school where, most ironically, fellow students had taunted him for features they called Jewish. He'd had a smattering of engineering training, a few jobs, some idleness, was given to brooding.

Progress to infamy, 1932-1940: After three years of underground work in Austria, Eichmann went to Germany, immediately won attention by his zeal. Starting as a Nazi clerk, he won promotions that gave him spare time to concentrate on "the Jewish problem," learned to speak Yiddish, to read Hebrew. When the SS set up a special Jewish section in 1937, he applied eagerly and was accepted. Assigned to Austria, he promoted Jewish migration through terror, forced several thousand Jews to flee. Hitler noticed him, put him in top charge of the SS Jewish Bureau.

The butcher, 1941-1944: Authorized in 1941 by Hitler to press on with "the final solution" of the Jewish problem, Eichmann set up his efficient death factories in towns forever infamous — Auschwitz-Birkenau, Treblinka, Bergen-Belsen, Dachau, Buchenwald. Jews rolled in by the train-loads, were gassed and cremated. Eichmann reached his peak in 1944 when he took 14,000 Jews a day out of Hungary to destruction in Germany. The same year, he sought callously to trade one million Jews to the Allies for 10,000 trucks for the German army.

Escape and capture, 1945-60: Posing as a corporal, Eichmann was arrested by the Allies in May, 1945, and clapped in a POW camp. Late in 1946, he escaped and hid out in Germany for two years. Then, sought all over the world by Jewish intelligence agents, he made his way to Italy, Syria, Spain, back to Italy and, in 1950, to Argentina, where his wife and family joined him in 1952. Though based in Argentina, he still drifted, sought livelihoods in a half-dozen Latin-American countries. The dogged Jewish agents spotted Mrs. Eichmann early in 1960 in Austria when she returned for passport renewal. They trailed her back to Buenos Aires and there seized her husband on May 11, 1960.

Trial for humanity, 1961: Flown secretly back to Israel, Eichmann was indicted under Israel's 1950 Nazi and Nazi Collaborators Law. He was charged with — here was the grimmest of irony — not murder, but principally with crimes against humanity and the Jewish people, with intent "to destroy the Jewish people, in whole or in part." His trial — the most spot-lighted one ever held in the world — ran for sixteen weeks, starting April 11, during which the defendant sat closely guarded in a bullet-proof, glass-enclosed prisoner's box. Eichmann, sometimes stolid, sometimes nervous and twitchy, contended throughout that he was no murderer, only a cog in the machine that carried out orders.

The end, 1962: On Dec. 11, he was found guilty on all fifteen counts of the indictment. As the verdict was read, he lost the stolidity which he had displayed through most of the trial. His face twitched, his body was seized with tremors. Four days later he was sentenced to be hanged. He was in his death cell awaiting results of his appeal when Christmas came. Offered a chance to pray with a Protestant minister, he refused. During the last days of June, his wife was permitted to visit him for 90 minutes in prison. Eichmann was reported "like steel" during the brief reunion. Somewhat earlier, however he finally agreed to accept the "spiritual advice" of the Rev. William Hull, pastor of the Zion Christian Mission in Jerusalem. Mr. Hull called him "the hardest man I ever saw." The Supreme Court of Israel denied his appeal on May 29. Then the prisoner, still bitter and seemingly unrepentant, penned a four-page letter to President Itzhak Ben-Zvi, his last resort. The President refused to grant clemency. Eichmann was hanged.

The Israeli public met it with cold silence to the execution of Adolf Eichmann, says the New York Times. The former Nazi officer convicted by an Israeli court of having arranged the transportation of millions of Jews to death camps was hanged in Ramle Prison two minutes before midnight on May 31.

His remains were cremated before dawn. The ashes were taken to sea in a police boat and scattered in the Mediterranean outside Israeli waters.

Eichmann's execution came less than sixty hours after he had lost an appeal to the Supreme Court of Israel and just a few hours after President Itzhak Ben-Zvi had rejected his plea for clemency.

At newsstands in the morning Israelis stood silently, shoulder to shoulder, staring at bold headlines that read: "Eichmann Hanged."

Among the hundreds of appeals President Ben-Zvi received from persons who wanted him to use his right to grant clemency to Eichmann was a telegram from the condemned man's wife, Vera, who begged him to show mercy for the "mother of four children." The President wrote these words on the margin of the telegram from Vera Eichmann:

"As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women." (I Samuel, xv, 33).

The President's reference was to the last words Samuel uttered before he "hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal."

Some Israelis paid compliments to Eichmann for the way he met his doom. The prisoner did not falter as he walked fifty yards past empty cells between his own and his guards' living quarters. The guards' quarters had been fitted with a gallows and a trap door that would drop his body almost to the floor of the room below.

Standing under the noose Eichmann did not look like the man whose face had become so familiar in the glass cage in which he was confined through the long months of his trial, he was pale but he seemed relaxed, says the New York Times. He wore reddish-brown trousers, a shirt open at the collar, sandals, and heavy woollen socks.

When the guards on each side of him released the handcuffs that bound them to him, Eichmann's hands were tied behind his back. His ankles were bound. His knees were bound so tightly that he protested he would not be able to stand erect and the knot was loosened for him. He refused a black hood. His last words were:

"After a short while, gentlemen, we shall all meet again. So is the fate of all men. I have lived believing in God and I die believing in God. Long live Germany. Long live Argentina. Long live Austria. These are the countries with which I have been most closely associated and I shall not forget them. I greet my wife, my family and friends. I had to obey the rules of war and my flag. I am ready."

He spoke in German and the words he used for "believing in God" was "Gottesglaubiger." The Nazis used it to denote people who had left the church but who professed to believe in God.

Eichmann was staring downward at the black trap door he stood on, his head slightly to one side, his eyes nearly closed at the moment that the trap opened and he dropped through.

Eichmann was tried and executed under a law for the punishment of Nazis and Nazi collaborators. The death penalty for ordinary murder has been abolished in Israel. His will included a request that his remains be cremated.

Fifteen years of freedom for the former Gestapo officer ended in Argentina on May 11, 1960, when he was seized by Israeli agents. He was smuggled to Israel by plane.

His trial began April 11, 1961, before three judges of the Jerusalem District Court. He was found guilty on Dec. 15, 1961, and sentenced to be hanged, says the New York Times. He was defended by Dr. Robert Servatius, a West German lawyer.

The following editorial, "Guilt", is from the New York Times:

"The man who died in Ramle, Israel, Thursday night was an accessory before the fact in the murder of 6,000,000 people. He worked with passionless efficiency under the orders of his official superiors. He told his official inferiors where to go and what to do. All along the line, from the first knock on the door at midnight to the final terror of the gas chamber, there was a careful precision in what was done.

"Where else did the guilt lie? There were technicians and engineers who designed machinery for murder. There were contractors who made a profit out of building this machinery. There were locomotive drivers who pulled the throttle on the death trains. There were guards who snatched babies from their mothers' arms, only to dash them against a wall. There were scavengers who took the clothing and small valuables of those about to die. What was their guilt? How do we measure it?

"There were those who had no part in what was done but who knew of it and were not offended by it. There were those who knew about it and were offended by it and did not protest. What was their guilt?

"There was a whole nation in which hate was a political doctrine and a test of loyalty. There were those who actually hated. There were those who may not have hated but who pretended to for their own security, or perhaps even for their own prosperity.

"Hate is murder. Was pre-war Germany the only country in which this murderous emotion was allowed full play? No. In different forms it was encouraged in Russia and other Communist countries. It was stimulated in Spain, where it put a dictator in power. It is a deadly disease everywhere where races are in conflict. What of our own country, where the power of the Federal Government has had to be invoked to secure equal justice for a racial minority?

"The great religions of the Mediterranean Basin, two of them centered in or near what is now the State of Israel, have for two thousand years and more taught the gospel of love. Two thousand years — and in our time we have seen two outbreaks of insane hatred that have caused world wars; the impact of man's inhumanity to man has been implemented by more and more frightful weapons. Who bears the guilt for that?

"The innocent who died in these wars may have been more fortunate than the guilty wretch who perished at Ramle on Thursday night. But seemingly we will have to learn from the guilty and the innocent alike. The statesmanship that might help us today is found in several of the great religions. It is known to many of us as the Sermon on the Mount."

Survey Shows Jewish Students Want To Go To College More Than Any Others

Results of a survey, first of its kind conducted by the volunteer members of a women's organization, indicate that Jewish high school youth want college educations more than any other youth group in the United States and Canada. The proportion of Jewish 10th, 11th, and 12th graders who plan to attend college is "much higher" than that of other youth on comparable academic levels, according to results announced to the Bnai Brith Women executive board at its semi-annual session, in Washington, D.C.

Chapter members of this Jewish women's service organization collected needed data from more than 8,000 Jewish teen-agers from coast to coast, reported Mrs. William Fineman, of Albany, N.Y., the vocational service chairman. She said their activity marks the first research survey in depth implemented by volunteer woman power to determine educational-vocational trends among Jewish youth. Bnai Brith Women cooperated on the project with the Bnai Brith Vocational Service.

Dr. S. Norman Feingold, national Bnai Brith Vocational Service director, said the information on college or work plans of Jewish students after high school is viewed as "vital" by educators, guidance counselors, and others who work with Jewish youth. The data, compiled from answers to professionally designed questionnaires, reflect their ultimate vocational goals in light of factors directly affecting occupational choice and the need for financial assistance to make further education possible.

Bearing the questionnaires, Bnai Brith Women members appeared at community meetings of seven national Jewish youth organizations, including the Bnai Brith Youth Organization. Answering the 59 comprehensive questions were Jewish boys and girls ranging from 13 to 19 years. Ninety per cent of the total group said they would attend college; six per cent were undecided, and four per cent indicated no interest in college.

"The primary motive of those who plan college careers was to train for a future occupation," stated Mrs. Fineman. More than 80 per cent of the boys and 75 per cent of the girls hope to enter professional fields, and in both groups the "desire to help others" was the stated reason for that choice. Engineering ranked highest as the boys' future job preference, and education was first with the girls.

Mrs. Fineman said a second, though far less-important, influence on the youngsters' decision to attend college was the wish to acquire a general cultural education. Few gave "to please my family" or "because many of my friends are going" as reasons. The most frequent reason given for not going was failure to meet grade requirements. The chairman pointed out that nearly all of the students indicating college preference were at the top of their classes.

The survey results included wide parental approval of the youngsters' occupational choice, though selections by more than half of the group regardless of adult sanction showed a possible "break with the Jewish tradition" of parents' influence. One third of the young people who answered the survey questions have mothers who work outside the home, with three fifths employed full time. Survey answers also showed a need for extended activity in the field of vocational counseling. School counselors and teachers were listed as the most important counseling source.

Mrs. Fineman said results from the survey are expected to alter the future career guidance programming and publications of the Bnai Brith Vocational Service. Two leading researchers, Dr. Howard Rosen and Sol Swerdloff, of Washington, D.C., prepared the material on which she based her report. Other Jewish youth organizations, cooperating through their national headquarters with Bnai Brith Women, and reached by members of Bnai Brith Women in the "grass roots" were: Habonim, National Council of Young Israel, National Federation of Temple Youth, National Jewish Welfare Board (Jewish Community Centers), National Young Judea, and United Synagogue Youth.

The marriage of Miss Elly Louise Bader, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bader, 608 St. Clements Avenue, to Neil Bernard Katzman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Katzman, 93 Glen Rush Boulevard, was solemnized on Tuesday, May 22, at half-past five o'clock, at Beth Sholom Synagogue, by Rabbi David Monson, assisted by Cantor Henry Wahrman. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a long, white gown of peau de faille. The scooped neckline and the front of the skirt were appliqued in self-made designs of Alencon lace; and the bouffant skirt extended to form a chapel train. Her self-material, cabbage rose headdress placed her finger-tip, tulle illusion veil; and she carried a cascade bouquet of white orchids and stephanotis. The matron of honour was Mrs. Melvern Katzman, sister-in-law of the groom, in a periwinkle-blue, chiffon gown, the bodice of which was beaded. The maid of honour was Miss Marilyn Bader, cousin of the bride, wearing a periwinkle-blue, chiffon gown, with bodice of lace. Both had matching blue bows in their hair; and carried semi-cascades of mauve roses and baby chrysanthemums. The flower girl was Debbie Katzman, niece of the groom. She wore a pink organza dress; with a pink bow in her hair; and carried a nosegay of pink roses. The best man was Melvern Katzman, brother of the groom. The ushers were: Lew and Fred Solmon, cousins of the bride; Herschel Leibowitz, Steven Farber, and Melvern Goldberg, cousins of the groom; Charles Horowitz, Norman Grill, and Karl Kramil. A dinner and reception took place at the synagogue. Mrs. Bader, the bride's mother, wore a long, ball gown of periwinkle-blue chiffon, designed with a cowl neckline; and a short train in back; also a hat of that shade; and her wristlet was of purple orchids. Mrs. Katzman, the groom's mother, attired in a long gown of periwinkle-blue peau de soie, had a matching hat; and a wristlet of purple orchids. Mrs. Etta Goldberg, grandmother of the groom, wore a pale blue, lace gown. Mr. and Mrs. Neil Bernard Katzman spent their wedding trip in Puerto Rico, and Jamaica, B.W.I. The bride went away in a navy-blue suit; with a red picture hat; and a white fox stole. They will reside at 525 Chaplin Crescent. Here for the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. Mac Tepper, and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rubin, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Manny Finkelstein, and Mr. and Mrs. Larry Weiss, of Long Island, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Saul Rothman, and Leslie, Ronnie, and Robin, of Boston, Mass.; and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Kay, of Windsor, Ont.

ISRAEL'S FOURTEENTH YEAR SHOWS PROGRESS TOWARD THE GOAL

denied, in violation of the Armistice Agreement, by the Jordan Government. The Centre, which cost $30 million to build, has 3,000 halls and rooms, and 500 hospital beds.

A new departure is the opening of the District Health Centre at Ashkelon, which includes clinics, the first stage of the new hospital for the area, and the district offices of the Ministry of Health. The Centre, which is intended to secure the maximum coordination between preventive and curative health services, has been set up with the aid of the South African Zionist Federation.

The recent increase in immigration has brought valuable reinforcements to the ranks of Israel's physicians; 469 licences to practice, a record number, were issued, including 67 to graduates of the Medical School in Jerusalem.

The bed-strength in Israel's hospitals went up from 14,429 in 1960 to 15,010 last year. A special work village for new immigrant mental patients, who arrived with their families, was set up in Pardessia, with accommodation for 120 patients. In cooperation with Malben, the American Joint Distribution Committee's program for the care of sick and aged immigrants, a classification and rehabilitation centre has been established, and a clinic has been built for outpatient treatment of mental cases.

The infantile death rate continues to fall, from 30.8 per thousand in 1960 to 29.8 this year. All children up to the age of four were inoculated against polio with the new serum, and all children up to five were reinoculated during February, 1962.

Israel's fourteenth year was marked by the beginning of a further stage in the effort to build a modern, self supporting economy. On February 9, 1962, Levi Eshkol, the Minister of Finance, presented to the nation a plan for economic consolidation and further progress along the road to economic independence.

A central feature of the plan was the establishment of a new, uniform rate of exchange: three Israel pounds to the United States dollar. At the same time customs duties and import levies are to be reduced, foreign trade procedures simplified, and export premiums abolished. The plan aims at strengthening the competitive capacity of the economy, placing industry and agriculture on a basis of cheap and efficient production, and improving the balance of payments.

"The main aims of the State in the economic field in the coming years," Mr. Eshkol said in announcing the plan, "are threefold:

"(a) The advancement of our economic independence, while winning our place in the world economy;

"(b) Absorption of immigration on a wide scale;

"(c) Development of the Negev and the remaining desolate parts of the country."

The upward line of economic activity characteristic of the Israeli economy continued in 1961, according to preliminary estimates of national income and expenditure recently published by the Central Bureau of Statistics.

The Gross National Product at fixed prices increased by approximately 9 per cent; total real resources at the disposal of the economy by approximately 10 per cent; and gross investment by some 13 per cent. In the same period, the average population grew by around 3 per cent, so that in real terms the per capita rise of the national product was about 5½ per cent. (In 1960 the national product increased by 7½ per cent, or 4½ per cent per capita.)"

After the stability of the investment level in 1960, the most noteworthy factor on the economic scene in 1961 was the sharp 13 per cent rise in gross investment, the highest since 1957. The rate of increase in investment was not equal in all branches of the economy. The most conspicuous rise was in transport (more than one-third), mainly because of the increase in imports of ships and aircraft (by about 60 per cent), the rise in the number of commercial vehicles, and the development of the port of Ashdod. There were also above-average rises in all other branches of the economy, except agriculture, where investment fell.

Investments in housing increased during the year by approximately 10 per cent. In public housing schemes (in particular for immigrants) there was an even larger increase. Investment in equipment and machines alone increased at the rate of approximately 17 per cent. Other sharp increases were recorded in investments in shipyards, quarries, and hotels.

There was a considerable rise in output in all branches of the economy. Industrial output rose by 15 per cent, two per cent more than in 1960. In building, output increased by about 9½ per cent, as contrasted with a decrease of 2½ per cent in 1960. Only in agriculture did the rate of increase fall below that of 1960, with a 5 per cent rise in 1961 compared with a 6 per cent rise in 1960.

While the national product at fixed prices increased by 9 per cent, the total real resources at the disposal of the economy in 1961 were 10 per cent higher, as a result of a 13½ per cent rise in imports. (Much of the increase in imports in 1960 and 1961 was due to the increased import of ships and aircraft). Exports of goods and services at fixed prices rose by 12½ per cent — from IL. 646 million to IL. 727 million (compared with 24½ per cent in 1960).

The increased resources were used for the following purposes: about half the increase for more private consumption; about one-quarter for increasing gross investment; slightly less than one-fifth for increasing exports; the remainder for increasing public consumption.

Private consumption at fixed prices rose by 6 per cent per capita, a slightly higher rate than in 1960. Particularly outstanding were the rises in purchases of furniture and household equipment, and clothing and footwear. Food consumption rose at a lower rate, the main increases being in meat and fish, eggs, fresh fruit, tea, coffee, sugar, and sugar products.

The rise in the prices of local goods and services during the year averaged 8 per cent, the largest since 1956. The total value of the national product at current prices amounted to approximately IL. 5,247 million in 1961.

The total cultivated area rose from 1,020,000 acres in 1960 to 1,070,000 in 1961, and the irrigated area from 325,000 to 350,000 acres. The largest increases in output were registered in fruit other than citrus (27 per cent); industrial crops (27 per cent); and poultry (19 per cent). There was a considerable rise in the area under industrial crops, except groundnuts. Cotton, for example, rose from 26,000 acres in 1960 to 42,000 in 1961, and the output increased from 10,650 to 14,000 tons of cotton lint and from 16,300 to 24,000 tons of cotton seed. The sugar beet area increased from 9,500 to 14,500 acres and the output from 169,000 to 244,000 tons. Tobacco output rose from 1,760 tons to 2,275 tons.

Other notable increases were: wheat from 41,000 tons to 66,000; bananas from 34,000 tons to 44,000; poultry from 46,000 tons to 55,000 tons. Citrus exports are expected to be about 9 million cases in the current season (1961/62), a million more than last year. The value of agricultural exports, other than citrus, for the current fiscal year, ending March 31, is estimated at $20 million, a rise of 25 per cent over the previous year.

An interesting experiment in desert cattle ranching was started at Neot Hakikar, near the Dead Sea. A group of settlers started date palm growing and beef cattle rearing, after successfully draining the swamps and harnessing five spring outlets.

A further successful agricultural experiment in the Negev has been the acclimatization of citrus, after experiments over a number of years. Though "Shamuti", the most common variety in Israel, has not succeeded in the Negev, other varieties, as well as grapefruit and lemons, have been found to be suitable. Three thousand acres of citrus groves were under cultivation in the Northern Negev in 1961, and trial shipments to England over the last three seasons were well received. Industrial productivity has increased over the last few years by an average of 5 per cent per annum.

The Textile Industry, which employs some 32,000 workers, has received particular encouragement and attention, as it is highly suitable for the absorption of new immigrants, and has shown considerable advances. While $17.8 million worth of textiles were exported in 1960, this figure was surpassed in the first nine months of 1961. A number of new spinning and weaving mills and synthetic yarn plants were established during the year, mainly in development areas.

The Nazareth Textile Works has 20,000 spindles and employs 200 workers. A very large textile centre has been built at Dimona in the Negev, and production is starting. Other factories have been built recently at Ofakim in the Negev, and Caesarea, Kiryat Shmona and Afula in the North.

The rising standard of living has resulted in a demand for a wider range of manufactured food products. At the same time exports are steadily rising, the main items being citrus products, edible oils, wines, tinned goods and instant coffee. Two new citrus processing plants and a large sugar refinery in Kiryat Gat are among the major new enterprises.

Metals and electrical equipment employ some 45,000 workers. There are 28 undertakings making electronic equipment, mainly radio sets, record players, and communications and control equipment.

Autocars of Haifa has produced new models, including passenger and sports cars, with bodies made of fibre-glass. It also produces commercial vehicles. Kaiser-Ilin of Haifa has established a large plant for spare parts at Ashkelon. A contract was signed for a new factory at Ashdod to produce buses and heavy trucks; plans have also been drawn up for the building of a tractor plant by foreign investors in partnership with local firms.

The planning of the petrochemical industry has made progress and a number of plants are projected or in process of construction. A modern pigment plant is to be built in Haifa by a newly established company. It will supply raw material to the local paint industry and export its products as well.

An important recent development in the field of plastics is the manufacture of raw materials, as well as consumer goods; for instance the production of polyester resins has been started. The tire industry has stepped up production by some 30 per cent to 13,500 tons a year. A new enterprise for the manufacture of synthetic rubber, Alliance-Caesaria Polymer Industries, affiliated to the Alliance Tyre Company, was inaugurated in January 1962. A new plant for the manufacture of fibre-glass is to be established at Kfar Yeroham, near Beersheba, according to an agreement signed in December 1961 with American holders of fibre-glass weave patents. A new plant for the manufacture of extracts for medical use was established in Natanya, and the Helena Rubinstein plant has been erected near Nazareth.

The 453 investments approved by the Government Investment Center during 1961 (as against 440 in 1960 and 200 in 1959) represent, according to preliminary figures, $158 million in foreign currency and IL. 141 million in local currency. This is a very large increase over 1960, when the figures were $105.8 million and IL. 64.4 million.

The Knesset took an important step to regulate the management and development of Israel's ports by passing the Ports Authority Law, setting up an autonomous corporation to plan, construct, develop, direct, operate and maintain the ports. Maj.-Gen. Haim Laskov, former Chief of Staff of the Israel Defence Forces, was appointed Director-General of the Authority, which took over on July 1, 1961.

There was a further large expansion in Israel's merchant fleet during the year. Deadweight tonnage went up by 70 per cent, from 375,000 tons in 1960 to 640,000 at the end of 1961, and the number of ships from 50 to 70 in the same period. In 1962 another 230,000-ton vessels is to be acquired. Fifteen more, with a total tonnage of 260,000 deadweight tons, have been ordered and will be ready within three years, bringing the total up to 900,000 tons.

One of the main problems arising out of the rapid increase is the training of crews, and a variety of schemes have been initiated for the purpose.

Dr. N. Wydra, General Manager of Zim, the Israel Navigation Co., proposes as a target that Israel should have one deadweight ton of shipping for each inhabitant. "There is no limit to the possibilities of expansion," he says, "except the capital for investment and the capacities of our crews." Extensive modernization and expansion is underway at Lod (Lydda) Airport. By 1965 the space will be increased by two-thirds. The passenger waiting area will be expanded by 40 per cent by April, facilitating two-way passenger traffic to avoid interference between incoming and outgoing passengers. In 1961, 3,351 planes landed at Lod Airport, compared with 2,926 in 1960, with a turnover of about 300,000 passengers arriving and departing, compared with 225,450 in 1960.

El Al Israel Air Lines topped the load factor table over all other air lines in 1961, averaging over 60 per cent full planes. In 1962 it will have a fleet of three long-range Boeing 707s; two medium-range Boeing 720Bs; and two Bristol Britannia turbo-props. It will thus have 550 seats available at one time and will fly ten flights weekly across the Atlantic, compared with six in 1961.

1961 was again a record year for tourism in Israel: there were 160,000 tourists, 42,000 more than in the previous year and almost twice as many as in 1959. Further expansion is expected, and the Government Tourist Corporation has made plans to expand hotel accommodation by 50 per cent within the next four years. Plans have been approved for the building of 20 new hotels within this period, and the extension of 20 existing hotels. The number of rooms available will thus rise from 7,110 to over 10,000.

To prevent over-concentration of tourists in the centre of the country, it is planned that by 1966, 20 per cent of the accommodation will be in the North and the South. The plans also cover the training of 3,000 additional guides, air hostesses, travel agency clerks, and hotel staffs by 1965. Cheaper hotel and travel prices are being instituted for the winter months.

There has been considerable progress in the Israeli film industry during the past two years. Four full-length Israeli films have been produced, and eight more are in progress and due to be completed this year. Three full-length films have been filmed in Israel by foreign companies as well as two on a co-production basis. In addition, many documentary films have been produced by Israeli and foreign companies for cinema and television showing, and the two local newsreels, Carmel-Herzliya and Geva, have continued to appear regularly. Israel has many advantages for the film industry: the excellent climate, the extraordinary variety of types of scenery within easy access from the main centres, and the historic associations of the country. Foreign film producers receive customs and other facilities and concessions, willing assistance from Government and public institutions, and technical advice. Two and a quarter million dollars in foreign currency have been earned from film-making during the past two years.

Israel's net exports in 1961 (without re-exports) were $239 million, 13 per cent more than the 1960 total of $211 million (in 1958 it was $176 million), according to figures published by the Government Bureau of Statistics. The increase was almost entirely in industrial exports, a reflection of steady expansion during the year. They made up 74 per cent of the total, compared with 71 per cent in 1960. Thirty-three per cent of the additional industrial exports consisted of polished diamonds, while textiles and clothing made up 22 per cent of the increase. Citrus exports went down by $6.1 million, while other agricultural exports rose by about the same sum.

Europe and North America took 78.8 per cent of Israel's exports (79.8 per cent in 1960). The European Economic Community (Common Market) countries took 27.9 per cent (20.8 per cent in 1960); the European Free Trade Area countries 25.9 per cent (28.7 per cent in 1960); of which the United Kingdom took 14.6 per cent and the United States took 15.9 per cent (13.6 per cent in 1960).

Imports in 1961, after deducting re-imports, amounted to $651 million, compared with $603 million in 1960. Of the increase, 62 per cent was due to higher purchases of investment goods (including $15.5 million for ships and planes), and 35.5 per cent was raw materials. Only 2.4 per cent of the increase was consumer goods.

Most of Israel's imports, 86.6 per cent, came from Europe and North America. The European Common Market countries supplied 30.3 per cent of the total (29 per cent in 1960) and the European Free Trade Association countries 22.3 per cent (22.2 per cent in 1960), including 13.4 per cent from the UK. The United States provided 29.3 per cent of the imports (29.1 per cent in 1960). Forty-two and a half per cent of imports were covered by exports, compared with 41.3 per cent in 1959, but the deficit in the balance of trade was $322 million, $38.4 million more than in 1960. Taking services into account, as well as goods, 52 per cent of imports were covered by exports.

Israeli goods were shown at 23 exhibitions and fairs in France, Italy, German Federal Republic, Poland, Yugoslavia, Greece, South Africa, Rhodesia, Ghana, Nigeria, Ivory Coast, C.A.R., Liberia, USA, Peru, Turkey and Japan. Three hundred and fifty firms took part and it is estimated that about 7 million people viewed the Israel exhibits.

In December, 1961, Israel was admitted as a full member to GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade), after having been an associate member for some years.

The most striking demonstration during the year of the growth of Israel's scientific capacity was the launching on July 5, 1961, of Shavit II, Israel's first multi-stage meteorological rocket. The test was a part of a scientific probing of the stratosphere and the ionosphere. The rocket was planned, constructed and fired by Israel scientists and technicians.

There was steady progress in nuclear research for peaceful purposes; Israel is not engaged in the production of nuclear military materials. Isotopes for medical and industrial purposes are produced at the experimental reactor at Nahal Sorek. A locally produced isotope was put to use for the first time for medical purposes in November, 1961. Within the coming year the Weizmann Institute hopes to complete negotiations for the construction of an industrial plant to produce labelled compounds of oxygen isotopes.

On October 24 a four-month international course on advanced radio-biology, the first of its kind to be held anywhere, was opened under the auspices of the UN Atomic Energy Agency and the Israel Atomic Energy Committee at the Nahal Sorek reactor.

Considerable progress was achieved in the field of water desalination. In July 1961 a ground-breaking ceremony for the first plant to produce fresh water from seawater utilizing the Zarchin process took place at Eilat. The plant is planned for a capacity of 250,000 gallons a day. A model household apparatus for the desalination of brackish water, based on the electrodialysis principle, has been developed by Israeli scientists and put into operation near the Dead Sea.

An advance towards the exploitation of solar energy was achieved with the design and construction of a 5-horse-power model of a solar energy power package, which attracted much favourable attention abroad. The apparatus was developed by the National Physical Laboratory of the National Council for Research and Development, directed by Dr. H. Tabor.

Among other advances registered during the year by the scientists of the Weizmann Institute of Science, at Rehovot; the Hebrew University, at Jerusalem; the Technion, Israel Institute of Technology, at Haifa, and other institutions, were: a greatly improved sub-miniature electroencephalograph, for measuring brain-waves in humans and animals; a new insecticide for houseflies, which works by sterilizing the female; a new steel alloy, with an exceptional range of hardness and softness; a new variety of rust-resistant oats; and new methods of locating brain growths, tracing radioactivity in water, and testing the quantity of uranium in ore samples.

Israel's scientific institutions have a high reputation, and hundreds of thousands of dollars are received in grants from abroad, especially from the US Department of Agriculture and the US National Institutes of Health, for research projects likely to contribute to the world's scientific knowledge. Among the subjects into which Israeli scientists are inquiring in this way are: the development physiology of perennial pasture grasses; the rheological properties of flour doughs (to be carried out by Prof. M. Reiner, of the Technion, one of the originators of the science of rheology, which deals with the deformation and flow of materials); the consumption of water by plants; the Khapra beetle, which destroys flour in store, especially in India; the tubercle bacillus; coronary heart disease; the effect of drought on conifers; the propagation of pine trees; the origins of leukemia; and a variety of other medical problems.

Professor Michael Evenari, of the Hebrew University Botany Department, continued his interesting research work in the Negev, aimed at bringing new life to the desert by studying the ancient farming methods of the Nabateans. The Rockefeller Foundation made a grant of $108,000 to the Hebrew University for this purpose, following a previous grant of $110,000 in 1959. Prof. Evenari claims that it should be possible to farm economically in the ancient manner without artificial irrigation.

A record number of forty guest scientists from 12 countries are engaged on research projects at the Weizmann Institute which received a $756,000 grant from the Edmond James de Rothschild Memorial Group, following one of $890,000 made in 1960, for research in animal breeding. An agreement for the establishment at the Technion, Israel Institute of Technology, Haifa, of a research institute for ceramic and silicate products was signed in December between the UN Technical Assistance Board and the Israel Government.

The Israel National Academy of Sciences, which advises the Government on scientific research and planning, and represents Israeli science as a whole, held its first open meeting on January 30, 1962. The Programme for Scientific Translations in Jerusalem, established under an agreement between the US and Israel Governments, provides some 5,000 customers throughout the world with English translations of Russian scientific works. It is one of the world's largest publishers of scientific literature.

Educational expansion continued normally during the year. In 1961 some 563,000 pupils attended kindergartens, primary, secondary and vocational schools in the State-supervised network, as against 545,000 in 1960, and the number of educational institutions supervised by the State rose from 4,128 to 4,228 in the same period. Counting private religious schools of various denominations, yeshivot (talmudical academies) and institutions of higher learning, over 600,000 pupils and students were receiving education.

The Hebrew University: The number of students enrolled in the academic year 1961/62 is 7,000 (including 1,500 students in the University's Tel Aviv branch), as against 6,700 last year. There are also 600 research students.

Departments for African, Asian, and Russian studies have been established recently. A special medical course, conducted in English, has been opened for African students. A similar course in French is to follow.

The new degree of Bachelor of Social Work was conferred for the first time on 44 students. New buildings completed during the year were: the Sprinzak Building for the Institute of Contemporary Jewry; a new Student Hostel also named for the late Josef Sprinzak, first Speaker of the Knesset; and new buildings for the Tel Aviv branch of the University and the Agricultural Centre at Rehovot.

The Technion, Israel Institute of Technology, Haifa: The number of students registered at the Technion in the academic year 1961/62 was 2,500, an increase of 100 over the previous year. A pre-matriculation course has been organized to prepare young people from Asian, African and South American countries for the entrance examination. Some 65 per cent of the students now attend courses at the new campus on Mount Carmel. New buildings for the Faculty of Chemistry and Chemical Engineering, a sports centre and a stadium are almost completed. Two additional dormitories are also being built, and the cornerstone of the Mechanical Engineering Building has been laid.

Bar-Ilan University: The number of students registered in the academic year 1961/62 was 740. The first M.A. degrees were conferred this year. Tel Aviv University: The number of students registered was 825. The cornerstone of the first permanent building, on the far side of the Yarkon River in north Tel Aviv, was laid this year.

The three established theatrical companies, Habimah, Ohel, and the Chamber Theatre, have been joined by the Haifa Municipal Theatre, the first of its kind in Israel, which was opened in 1961, with a new resident dramatic company. The auditorium, which seats 854, cost IL. 2.5 million to build. The company will play in other centres, as well as in Haifa, where 12,000 subscription tickets have been sold. The Chamber Theater in Tel Aviv also opened a new auditorium, of an original modern design, with over 900 seats. The Israel National Opera produced four operas during the 1960/61 season.

Plaster originals of works by two world famous sculptors, Jacques Lipchitz and the late Sir Jacob Epstein, were donated to the Bezalel National Museum in Jerusalem through the American-Israel Cultural Foundation. The Lipchitz collection consists of some 300 original plaster castings and spans 50 years of the artist's life work. The donation of Sir Jacob Epstein's works was made by his widow; it includes some 200 plaster originals. These two important gifts, together with the earlier donation of Mr. Billy Rose's collection of modern sculpture, will create an important sculpture centre in Jerusalem.

The famous Israel Philharmonic Orchestra celebrated its 25th anniversary in December, 1961. The orchestra, whose first concert was conducted by Toscanini on December 26, 1936, was founded by Huberman at a time of stress and danger for the Jewish communities in Palestine and in Europe. It has today 90 members, about one-third born or trained in Israel.

The First Israel Music Festival took place between August 26 and September 18, 1961, with a total of 20 concerts given in various centres, including an open-air concert in the newly restored Caesarea stadium. A number of outstanding musicians, including Pablo Casals, took part. The Third International Cello Competition was held following the Festival, with Casals on the jury.

The construction of an unusual sanctuary to house the Dead Sea Scrolls and other rare manuscripts, to be known as the "Shrine of the Book", was begun in Jerusalem. It is located on the site of the Israel National Museum and will also house the recently found Bar Kochba letters. The Shrine is based on a novel architectural concept; it is largely underground, except for a double parabolic dome, an idea suggested by the fact that the Scrolls were found in a cave.

The Bialik Prize for Judaica of the Tel Aviv Municipality was awarded to Prof. Martin Buber for his collection of Hassidic tales, "The Hidden Light", and his philosophical autobiography, "Mission and Ideal". The Prize for Belles Lettres was given to M. Ben-Yehezke'el, for his collection of Jewish lore of many centuries, "A Book of Tales". An important project was started by the Hebrew University, the Bialik Institute and the Ministry of Education and Culture: the compilation of a bibliography of all works printed in Hebrew characters, from the beginning of Hebrew printing in 1475.

Australian Jewry Plans For More Immigration

Australian Jewry's plans for continued immigration were discussed recently by Sydney D. Einfeld, M.P., president of the Executive Council of Australian Jewry, in talks with World Jewish Congress leaders in New York. Mr. Einfeld disclosed that Australia received 1,100 Jewish immigrants last year, raising the community's total to 65,000, more than double the 30,000 in 1946.

Mr. Einfeld also discussed with WJC officials the search for witnesses against Nazi criminals, and the activities of anti-Semitic organizations all over the world. The Australian Jewish leader reported that another 2,500 Jews in Europe had been approved as immigrants by the Australian authorities and were awaiting transportation. In addition, an Australian immigration officer had recently arrived in Egypt to process possible immigrants, some of whom would most certainly be Jews.

During his brief stay in New York, Mr. Einfeld was the guest of honor at a luncheon given in the delegates' dining room of the United Nations by the World Jewish Congress, and attended by Congress leaders from Europe, Israel, Africa, and South America as well as the United States. Dr. Perlzweig, who is the Permanent Representative at the U.N., presided and expressed the good wishes of his colleagues throughout the world to Mr. Einfeld on his recent election to the Australian Parliament.

Mr. Einfeld, he said, had won for himself an enviable reputation throughout the Jewish world for his distinguished service to civic and humanitarian causes, not only in his native Australia, but wherever he could be helpful to men and women who were suffering from discrimination and persecution and who were seeking refuge from intolerable conditions. Dr. Perlzweig referred to Mr. Einfeld's journeys to underprivileged Jewish communities in various parts of the world, and the selfless devotion with which he had been able to secure opportunities for the resettlement of considerable numbers. He said that Mr. Einfeld's new obligation as a Member of Parliament would give him new opportunities for human service on a wider scale in a country in which an old democratic tradition was finding new and creative forms of expression.

While in New York, Mr. Einfeld attended the meeting of the executive of the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany, and a meeting of the World Conference of Jewish Organizations. He also met with officials of United Hias; the Joint Distribution Committee; and the National Jewish Welfare Board where he discussed the reactivation of the youth center movement in Australia.

Elected on the Labor ticket, Mr. Einfeld is the only Jew to become a Member of Parliament in Australia in the last thirty years, and is the fifth Australian Jewish M.P.

On Sabbath nights, in many Jewish homes in Canada, a decanter of Mazel Tov wine finds its place on the starched tablecloth, right beside the challah.

Mazel Tov is a wine with a taste you'll 'remember', a ruby red, richly sweet 'kiddush' wine made of Concord grapes grown in the vineyards of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mazel Tov made 'Kosher l'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year, for every "simcha".

Israel's Fourteenth Year Shows Progress Toward The Goal, A Homogeneous Nation

The Eichmann Trial

The Prime Minister summed up the lessons of the trial in the essay already quoted:

"As the trial proceeded, critics and doubters were converted, realizing the fairness of Israeli justice, in spite of the profound emotions associated with the appalling tragedy of the extermination of millions of human beings, men and women, old and young, children and infants, for the sole crime of being Jews.

"The main thing is not formal judgment and penalty: no thinkable punishment can atone in the slightest for the enormity of this unparalleled crime. For the first time, however, in Jewish history, a murderer of our people has been tried by its judges, and it has been brought home more forcibly to Jews in the Diaspora and fair-minded men the world over that Israel is the State of the Jewish people. The victims of Nazism were not Israelis: it was Jewish citizens of European States, of Germany, Poland, and Hungary, of Holland, Greece, and Czechoslovakia, of Austria and Russia, that were butchered. Still, it is now universally felt that only Israel could be rightful plaintiff for the six million dead, because it is a Jewish State in actuality, and was potentially the State of the victims, because, in spite of its territorial limitation it embodies the historical continuity of the Jewish people.

"The trial has also been of great educational importance. To the new generation in Israel, born on Homeland soil and bred in the free air of a Jewish State, it has unveiled the profound tragedy of exile, of dependence on alien mercies, of abandonment to the evil and wilful impulses of tyrants. And the whole world beheld the moral dangers of anti-Semitism, the iniquities to which it may impel humanity, the awful truth that there is no guarantee that what happened in the forties in Germany will not happen elsewhere, if anti-Semitism runs amok once more." ("Israel's Achievements and Tasks." Government Year Book, 1961/62).

Israel and World Jewry

Israel's fourteenth year was marked by a renewal of mass immigration. It was estimated that 80,000 immigrants would come in during the 1961/62 financial year (April 1961 to March 1962), compared with 26,812 in the previous financial year, and the rate was expected to increase still further in the course of 1962. This is the largest immigration since 1957, when 72,800 immigrants came in.

This renewed flow is not the result of any change in the policy of the Government of Israel or the Jewish Agency, which is responsible for the transport and reception of immigrants. Under the Law of Return, 1951, any Jew who so desires is entitled to settle in Israel. The change is due entirely to current conditions in the countries from which the immigrants are coming.

The Government and Agency have adopted energetic measures to face the problems involved by this renewed influx. The main problem is housing, as the dynamic development of the Israel economy has practically wiped out unemployment; in fact, there is a shortage of hands in most branches. It was estimated that during the current financial year, over IL. 175 million would be required to build 18,000 homes, as well as schools, clinics, etc. This sum is being raised through Israel's State budget, Jewish Agency revenues, and long-term loans.

The Knesset imposed a compulsory absorption loan of IL. 25 million and the Government called a halt to non-residential building to ensure that all resources in materials and skilled manpower should be dedicated to building homes for the newcomers. The Jewish Agency increased the current 1961/62 budget from IL. 180 million to IL. 238 million, and adopted a record budget of over IL. 270 million for 1962/63. Jewry abroad was called upon to increase its contribution to the absorption of immigrants through the United Jewish Appeal and the Keren Hayesod.

A considerable proportion of the present immigration consists of professional men and women; 1,200 of these have arrived during the year, including 307 doctors. Special measures have been undertaken to give them rapid instruction in the Hebrew language and place them in suitable employment.

Of the professional men who have arrived since 1956, 80 per cent have been found work in their professions. Though Israel already has one of the highest ratios of doctors per capita in the world, the doctors who have arrived in the last five years have been found regular employment.

Home Affairs

The population of Israel at the beginning of 1962 was 2,232,300 of whom 1,984,200 were Jews and 248,100 were non-Jews. The population has thus grown by some 250 per cent since the establishment of the State in 1948. The country's second population and housing census was held by the Government Bureau of Statistics in May, 1961. The results showed that the biggest percentage increase in the past ten years was in the South and the Negev. Israel now has 34 towns with more than 10,000 inhabitants each, as against 10 in 1948.

Tel Aviv has 387,000 inhabitants; Haifa 180,000; Jerusalem 166,000. Ramat Gan, the fourth largest city, has 90,000 inhabitants, and the next largest towns are Petach Tikva (53,000); Holon (48,000); and Bnei Brak (47,000). The whole Tel Aviv area comprises close to 700,000 inhabitants.

Israel's democracy has successfully weathered a difficult year. A crisis at the beginning of the year over the report of a Cabinet committee of enquiry led to the resignation of the Prime Minister, David Ben-Gurion, which is equivalent by law to the resignation of the entire Cabinet. As no agreement was reached on the formation of a new Cabinet, the Knesset, the Israel legislature, decided to appeal to the people, and new elections were held on August 15.

For electoral purposes, the entire country is treated as one constituency, and the voters choose between lists of candidates submitted by the parties. The hundred and twenty seats in the legislature are distributed between the lists in proportion to the number of votes polled by each.

In the new Knesset, the fifth to be elected since independence, Mapai, the Israel Labour Party, with 42 seats, emerged again as the largest party, though it lost five of those it held at the last election in 1959, and its affiliated Arab lists went down from five to four places.

The new Liberal party gained three, making 17 seats, compared with eight and six respectively in 1959 for the General Zionists and the Progressives, who had merged to form the new party in April.

Achdut Ha'avoda (Unity of Labour) won eight seats, one more than last time, and the Communists five, a gain of two. The Orthodox Agudat Israel gained one seat at the expenses of its labour wing, giving them four and two respectively.

Herut (Freedom Movement) remained stable at 17; the National Religious Party at 12; and Mapam, the United Worker's Party, at 9. There are seven Arabs and Druse in the new Knesset.

On the announcement of the election results, President Izhak Ben-Zvi held consultations with representatives of all parties in the Knesset, as provided by law, with a view to the formation of a new Cabinet, and called upon David Ben-Gurion (Mapai) to undertake the task. As Mr. Ben-Gurion felt unable to accept the invitation, the negotiations were conducted by Levi Eshkol, of the same party.

Israel's main task in agricultural settlement today is to consolidate and stabilize the 486 new villages established in the past fourteen years. Most of them were set up at an unprecedented pace and with inadequate resources during the period when immigrants were coming at a rate rising to 240,000 in a single year.

The Agricultural Settlement Department of the Jewish Agency, which is in charge of this work, therefore dedicates its major efforts to completing their equipment, livestock, and installations. It also helps them to adjust their operations to present-day market conditions and the over-all planning of the Ministry of Agriculture, so as to provide them with a decent livelihood.

The aim up till now has been to ensure that each farming family should have an income of IL. 4,600; in planning for the future the goal has been advanced to IL. 6,000 so that the farmer should have approximately the same standard of living as the average industrial worker.

The 33,000 families (120,000 souls) in the new settlements produce 36 per cent of Israel's agricultural output; including about half the eggs and poultry; 60 per cent of the industrial crops; and one third of the oranges.

The following new villages have been founded during the year:

Almagor, founded by Nahal, the Army's agricultural training section, in the Korazin area, north of Lake Kinneret (Sea of Galilee). It has not yet taken a final decision on the type of settlement to be adopted.

A nucleus of settlers, belonging to the Kibbutz Meuhad Movement, has been organized for a new kibbutz to be established some 3½ kilometres from Eilat. It will engage in fishing and to some extent in agriculture, and various services, including an automatic laundry and workshops, are planned.

Aderet, a moshav (smallholders' cooperative settlement) in the Adullam area.

Ram On, a kibbutz, was established by the Bnei Moshavim Movement (youth from the smallholders' settlements) in the Ta'anach area, near Meggido.

In recent years new towns, especially in the arid Negev, have played a growing role in Israel's development plans. There are over twenty such towns, in which housing, employment, and social services are carefully planned, so that new immigrants can go straight from the ship to their new homes. Two new towns were founded during the past years and plans were made for two more.

The cornerstone of Arad, which is to be the centre of a new settlement area south-east of Beersheba, was laid in May, 1961. It has been planned for a population of 10,000 within the next four or five years, and ultimately 50,000. It is situated conveniently near the gas fields of Zohar and Kidod, the Dead Sea potash and bromine works, and the Negev phosphate deposits. It is also expected to become a tourist centre. Heading the advance party of planners, technicians, and workmen, is Aryeh Eliav, who was in charge of the first regional settlement scheme at Lachish.

A new type of settlement is Ramon, in the Negev, near the Ramon Crater, which is to be developed as a cooperative town. This is the first time the principles of the kibbutz have been applied to an urban settlement. In October, 1961, seventy young people, mainly ex-soldiers and civilian employees of the Air Force, went out to start building the town, with the aid of the Government and the Histadrut, the General Federation of Labour.

The town is to be administered by a cooperative association called Ramon Cooperative City Limited, which will "administer the general services of the town and all the cooperative activities, in production, services, and investment, and will provide its members with fair wages and suitable working conditions". Each member contributes a fixed sum as share capital and receives a monthly salary as well as a share in any profits.

The building of Besor, the centre of a new development area in the western Negev, is planned to start in Spring, 1962. A large textile combine is to be erected to provide employment for the first settlers.

The new town of Carmiel, on the Acre-Safed highway, has been planned for 1,400 families. A textile factory will be established, and additional employment will be provided by the nearby quarries.

The outstanding event in the health field during the year has been the opening of the fine new Hadassah-Hebrew University Medical Centre at Ein Karem, Jerusalem, to replace the buildings on Mount Scopus, to which access is Oh, Brother; Our David Lewis?

Under the heading of "Mr. David Lewis", the Toronto Globe and Mail, one of Canada's best daily newspapers, says:

Mr. David Lewis, the New Democratic Party candidate in York South, speaking at a political meeting on Tuesday charged that this newspaper, with other Canadian newspapers, was complying with demands from Bay Street and St. James Street financiers to support the Liberal Party in this election.

We have had occasions in the past to differ with Mr. Lewis, mostly on matters of opinion. Mr. Lewis is a lawyer; Mr. Lewis knows the law of libel, slander and defamation. Mr. Lewis is trading on the fact that he won't be sued by the newspapers. He is enjoying — perhaps foolishly — the political immunity allowed by the press.

There is only one thing to be said about Mr. Lewis' statement as far as The Globe and Mail is concerned. Mr. Lewis is a liar. What makes it worse, Mr. Lewis knows that he is.
